

How do you uninstall an app on android

Continue

It's always a good time to free up space on your Android phone -- whether you're getting an "insufficient storage" alert or you're preparing your phone to download Android 12. A great place to start is deleting your old apps that you no longer use. Apps are notorious storage eaters, and it's all too easy to accumulate a bunch of apps for stores you rarely visit, games you don't play anymore or services you don't use. If you know where to look, deleting an app on your Android phone or tablet is a straightforward process that takes just a few seconds to complete. But as is often the case with Android phones, not every phone uses the same method. I found four different ways you can uninstall an app on your Android phone, explaining each one in detail below. The tried-and-true method for all Android devices. Jason Cipriani/CNET A method for deleting apps that works on every Android phone. The tried-and-true method for deleting apps from your Android phone or tablet is simple: Long-press on the app's icon until the app shortcut's popup shows up. You'll either see an "i" button or see App Info; tap it. Next, select Uninstall. It's simple and works on every Android device I've ever used. Three alternative ways to uninstall Android apps with all things Android, not all phones work the same way and there are multiple ways of achieving the same task. For example, you can view a list of all apps installed on your phone in Settings > Apps & Notifications (sometimes it's just listed as Apps). Selecting an app will show you the same App Info screen you can access from the app shortcut, complete with the Uninstall button. For some, seeing a list of all of your apps in one place that you can easily scroll through instead of swiping through your home screens or app drawer is a better way to cut the fluff. You can also uninstall from the Play Store. Jason Cipriani/CNET You can also use the Play Store to uninstall apps by viewing an app's Play Store listing and selecting Uninstall next to the Open or Update button. Not all phones are created equal. On Samsung and OnePlus phones, for instance, you don't have to go through the extra step of selecting App Info after a long press on the app icon. There's an Uninstall option built into the app shortcuts menu, making the process much easier and quicker. After deleting apps to give yourself some extra storage and thin out your app drawer, make sure you look at these settings you should change. It's also a good time to give your phone a privacy tune-up by going through the privacy settings to help you protect your personal data. Oh, and don't forget about the hidden Android features we found and love. We know you'll love them too. If you're here, you've probably realized that you can't uninstall an app or two that you want to get rid of. There are plenty of reasons to uninstall unused apps -- especially since they take up space and system resources that you might need. In this article, we'll show you how to uninstall apps on Android that won't uninstall. Why Can't You Uninstall Some Apps? The three main reasons you can't uninstall a particular app are: It's a system app. These are necessary for your phone to function. They generally play critical roles, and you want to keep these around. It's a preinstalled app. Preinstalled apps are installed on your device before you buy it. Even if you factory reset your phone, these apps will remain. A classic example of a preinstalled app that many users try to remove is Samsung Pay. It's protected by administrator privileges. Some apps require admin privileges to function, which can protect them from being uninstalled. How To Disable Apps Some preinstalled apps just won't budge. Instead of going through a lengthy process to uninstall them manually, you can simply disable them. Disabling an app prevents it from using system resources, but it remains installed and still takes up space on your hard drive. To disable an app: Go to Settings. Tap on Apps. Find the app you wish to disable and tap it. If Uninstall is grayed out or not present, select Disable. Some apps won't allow you to even disable them. If this is the case, try the next methods to uninstall them. How To Uninstall Apps With Administrator Privilege Some apps are granted Android administrator access. These will prevent you from uninstalling them unless you revoke their administrator privilege. Sometimes, malware can also use administrator privilege to wreak havoc on your phone. If you're concerned you have malware, check out our guide for removing it. To do so: Open Settings. Tap on Biometrics and Security. Select Other security settings. Find the app you want to uninstall and tap the slider to revoke administrator privileges. On some models, you may have to tap the app and select Deactivate. Head back to Settings > Apps. Find the app you want to uninstall and tap it. Select Uninstall. How To Remove Apps with Android Debug Bridge (ADB) This is the lengthiest option but is guaranteed to uninstall any app from your Android phone. We recommend you use caution if you try this approach because uninstalling the wrong apps can break several of your phone's functions. Note: You can use ADB to install apps as well. First, you need to enable USB debugging on your phone. To do this: Open Settings > About phone. Scroll down and tap on Software information. Tap on Build number 7 times and input your security pin when prompted. You will see the message "You are now in Developer Mode". Go back to Settings and tap on Developer options. Find USB debugging and tap the toggle to enable it. Connect your phone to your PC and ensure that USB file transfer is turned on. You may receive a message that says, "Allow USB debugging?". If so, select Allow. Next, you will need to retrieve Android's SDK Platform Tools. Head to the official Android ADB software download page and download the package for your operating system. Android provides software for Windows, Mac OS, and Linux. Extract the files from the downloaded archive. To uninstall apps using this software, you need to know the app's package name. It isn't easy to find the package name, but luckily the App Inspector can reveal it for you. To install it and find the app's package name, do the following: Open the Google Play Store. Search for App Inspector. Install and open the app. Find the app you want to uninstall and tap on it. Note the package name. Next, use the Command Window (or Terminal on Mac) to access your phone via ADB. To do this: If you're using Windows, open the folder containing your ADB files, hold down the shift key, and right-click anywhere on the screen. Select Open a command window here. On Mac, open the Terminal app, type cd, press the Spacebar, then drag the ADB folder into the Terminal window. Finally, press Enter. In either window, type /adb uninstall, press Spacebar, enter the package name, then press Enter. For example, if you want to uninstall App Inspector, you would type: /adb uninstall bq.projectoria.appinspector If successful, the window should display a message saying "Success". And that's it -- your app will now be uninstalled. Stubborn Apps Begone! Hopefully, one of these methods helped you remove that stubborn app. Using the ADB tool takes the longest to set up, but it's easy to clear all those unused apps quickly once you do. If you're like most people, you probably have too many apps on your phone. From productivity apps you downloaded but never used to games you played for two weeks before abandoning, it's easy to overload your phone with unnecessary apps. If you're an Android user looking to clean up your home screen and pare it down to only what you need and use, there's good news. Android makes it very easy to clean up your home screen, and you don't even need to delete the apps to do so permanently. Android offers you the ability to trash an app altogether. But if you have apps that you don't want to see every time you open your phone, but also don't want to delete permanently, Android lets you move them to the app drawer instead. Moving an app to the app drawer means they won't be visible on your home screen, but you can still access them without having to redownload them. Here's how to permanently or temporarily remove an app on your Android. How to move apps to the app drawer on an Android 1. Press and hold the app you want to remove. 2. Your phone will vibrate once, granting you access to move the app around the screen. Press and hold on the app you want to get rid of until it vibrates. Melanie Weir/Business Insider 3. Drag the app to the top left corner of the screen, where it says 'Remove.' To move the app to the app drawer, drag it over to the Remove icon. Melanie Weir/Business Insider 4. Take your finger off the app once the app turns gray to complete the action. How to permanently delete apps on an Android 1. Press and hold the app you want to remove. 2.
