Survey of Education

A formal education is a very valuable tool in today's society. But why is it important, and what exactly makes up an education? I will attempt to explain these question through a variety of ways. As a current University student, I know what my education and college experience means to me, but I also want to know what other students think the purpose of an education is. I will investigate what exactly students learn and have learned at the Uof A. Then I will contrast the thought of traditional and non-traditional students.

First to get an accurate picture of the thoughts of UofA students, I had to choose a variety of students. They included both male and female, traditional and non-traditional students. I composed a poll which asked seven questions. Each question was asked on an individual level, and I expected those polled to be able to only answer for themselves. My questions read as followed:

1. Why are you in college and, in particular, at the Uof A?
2. What is you definition of the word education?

3. Do you think you earn an education, receive it, labor over it, or achieve it?
4. What will you get out of your University education?
5. Do you think you needed the college experience as opposed to going straight into the “real world”?
6. What have you really learned while you’ve been here?
7. What are the benefits of a University education?

Now I will first attempt to answer my own questions. Firstly, I am in the University because I think a degree will be essential for the work level which I want to enter. I also have been strongly influenced by my parents in the decision of coming to college. My father has c...

...ey didn't have a chance to learn earlier. Many non-traditional students have to really struggle over going back to school because they must make time out of their established life.

Traditional students can learn a lot from older students. Usually, younger students complain when they have non-traditional students in their classes. This is because the older students tend to ask many questions and really want to understand something before they move on. They are in class because they want to be. Younger kids shouldn't get frustrated in class when people ask questions and want to learn more about a subject. We, instead should realize that one day we will look back and see you important college was and what an opportunity we had. Traditional students need to take seriously and understand this could be the only time in our lives when we have an opportunity to learn.
