Protecting your Privacy from the Government

Privacy and the Government, for century's people have debated the conspiracy theory that the government is always watching you. With integration of information System, this fear is fast becoming reality. Since September 11, the Government has developed a completely new understanding of information the individuals that live in the United States. They are now focusing on the any and all potential threats to national security. The Government's big imitative, which is part of Homeland Security, is Total Information Awareness (TIA) also known as Terrorism Information Awareness. This campaign is the closest thing to 'Big Brother' that the United States has ever seen. It is a focus on pulling as much information together on as many people as possible into a single database, making the information available to government officials to weed out and find potential people involved in terrorism. On the surface this would seem to be a good thing, but if you look at the situation closer, you will find that they are gathering information on anyone and everyone. This means that they are gathering information on people for future purposes. They are gathering information on the pretense that they may use it in the future in the name of Homeland Security. The TIA is not the only mode of extraction of information from our privacy; the airlines in conjunction with the government have developed a similar system for airline passengers. The government is also purchasing information from other companies on its customer to gain more data on potential wrong doers. We will discuss basic points on all three later on this site. In essence many believe that they are violating our privacy.

...ng the awareness of privacy within its agencies. They have begun to create positions called Private Contact Officers (PCO), which have the responsibility of maintaining the integrity of the implied privacy agreement with its citizens. Of the government agencies polled over 74% respondents thought that privacy was extremely important to their agencies. Some of the main focuses of the agencies are on Internet security and personal information security and integrity. Most of the agencies polled expressed that privacy was a priority; it did not rank as one the top priorities. The issue of privacy and the government is getting better but at an extremely slow pace. Once people understand that when you lose your privacy you can never get it back, they will guard themselves and there personal information better. The only one that can help prevent invasion of privacy is ourselves.
