On Women Turning 70: Honoring the Voices of Wisdom

On Women Turning 70 is a book that is made up of interviews with several older women who took their biggest steps toward success when they were in their senior years. Rountree spoke with women like author Madeline L'Engle, and acclaimed newspaper columnist Liz Smith, who became successful just as she was about to retire. Rountree learned about the women's lives and got their take on feminism and aging to include in the book. The women that Rountree chose to interview seem to be women who either began living life to the fullest in their older years, or who achieved greatness young, and have held onto to that throughout their entire lives.

On Women Turning 70 includes profiles of sixteen women, with information about their past, and important moments in their lives. It also includes what each woman said in her interview about themselves, and their vitality. Some sections had quotes from the women about aging and why they are different than most women. For example, sociologist Lee Robins said of her new-found love at age 75, “How different is love in my seventies from when I was in love as a young woman? It’s not terribly different.....there are no unknowns anymore...” Robins goes on to tell more advantages to being her age and in love. She also tells her feelings about all of the positive things about being older, in general.

Author Doris Lessing had a similar take on life, having...
