Katy Perry's performance at the Brit Awards was the one we all hoped for- particularly after her Grammy Show last week, where she presented her new pop song of political cargo 'Chained To The Rhythm' and appeared to call President Donald Trump with some stealthy referrals in the process. As expected, she rose to the stage at O2 Arena in London with her new blond hair and her Hillary slang forgot and flashed the bubble banger for the first time in the UK. In the middle of the presentation, two GIANT skeletons went on stage to join Katy, Skip Marley and the dancing houses in a glorious gathering. But did you happen to detect anything familiar about them? via giphy. With anything? And now what? Oh my god. Last night, the 37th edition of the Brit Awards was held, this year at Arena 02 in London. David Bowie, RagAenAe Bone Man and The 1975 were some of the biggest winners of the night, with live performances by Ed Sheeran, Stormzy, Little Mix and a particularly touching tribute to George Michael by Chris Martin and Wham! The biggest surprise of the night, however, © came from Katy Perry who used her time on stage to make a bold political statement, making a very obvious dig at the friendship of Donald Trump and Theresa May. While playing her new song, Chained to the Rhythm, live on stage with Skip Marley, Katy turned her performance into a political allegory, dancing in front of a White House structure with two major ephemerals of Donald Trump and Theresa May skeleton. The skeletons were obviously dressed as the President of the United States and the British Prime Minister, wearing the same iconic costumes that the two lAderes wore at their first meeting last month in Washington, when they gave their hands as they descended the steps of the White House. Although Katy, a devoted Hillary Clinton supporter, has avoided saying something political about her performance, the fans have taken it upon them to decipher the meaning behind it. Some see the act as a warning about the "friendship" between Trump and May, with the two skeleton ephemerals spending the entire song trying to give their hands, finally separated by a giant faïence - perhaps a danger symbol. The performance ended with the two skeletons holding the head in their hands at opposite ends of the with the two hand singers given in the And Katy turned to the camera at the end and stirring his head. Others, however, are seeing performance as a call to the arms, especially when looking at the political connotations of the letters: à € "descending the walls to connect. inspire.
